

Are you a folksinger, instrumentalist or singer/songwriter?

Are you interested in the oral heritage of your region?

Are you a student of ethnomusicology, history or Canadian Studies?

Do you enjoy listening to traditional music?

If you can answer YES to any of these questions, you should join Canada's national organization for those interested in traditional music. Formed in 1957 as the Canadian Folk Music Society by the eminent folklorist Marius Barbeau, the Society has provided a national focus for lovers of the diverse traditions of music in Canada. Annual conferences have been held in all regions of the country, from St. John's, Newfoundland, to Vancouver Island, British Columbia. From its initial focus upon First Nations and rural French and English cultures, in recent years the Society has broadened its horizon to include the musical expressions of the many cultures that now call Canada home.

Membership Benefits

- Canadian Folk Music (quarterly: songs, reviews, feature articles and news about the Canadian folk music scene; a great way to find out about current developments in Canadian folk music).
- Canadian Journal for Traditional Music (annual: articles, references and commentary on current research in Canadian folk music).
- Mail Order Service: Canada's best source of books and recordings of Canada's traditional music; anyone may purchase from the Service, but members receive a substantial discount on all purchases.
- Annual conferences: held in different regions each year, conferences feature both academic papers and concerts, as well as informal jam sessions and singers' circles.
- Contact with other members with similar interests.
- Links with international bodies with interest in traditional music.
- Archives and associated collections of publications and recordings (housed at the University of Calgary).

The Canadian Society for Traditional Music is a registered charitable society, and all of your donations are tax-deductible.
